Eternity is likened to a cube of sand A million miles square from which,
At the end of every million years,
A bird comes to carry away one grain.
When the time has passed that the bird has carried away all the sand, Not one instant of eternal time may even be said to have begun.

James Joyce

Dean Beth,

It's been great!

I've always sort of looked up to you because you seem to carry a set of principals that you abide by.
And I respect that quality in people. You'll love Princeton - it's a great place. Whenever you get into New York come visit. I'd love to see you.

"Can we actually "know" the universe? My God, it's hard enough finding your way around in Chinatown. The point, however, is: Is there anything out there? And why? And must they be so noisy? Finally, there can be no doubt that the one characteristic of "reality" is that it lacks essence. That is not to say that it has no essence but merely lacks it. (The reality I speak of here is the same one Hobbes described, but a little smaller.) Therefore the Cartesian dictum "I think, therefore I am" might better be expressed "Hey, there goes Edna with a saxophone!" So, then, to know a substance or an idea we must doubt it, and thus, doubting it, come to perceive the qualities it possesses in its finite state, which are truly "in the thing itself," or "of the thing itself," or of something or nothing."

For over the misty mountains cold
To dungeons deep and caverns old
We must away ere break of day
To seek the pale enchanted gold.

The dwarves of yore made mighty spells
While hammers fell like ringing bells.
In places deep, where dark things sleep
In hollow halls beneath the fells.

For ancient king and elvish lord
There many a gleaming golden hoard They shaped and wrought, and light they caught
To hide in gems on hilt of sword.

I stand alone and watch the sea.
 The foam rolls in beneath my feet
 And I feel its bubbles burst between my toes.
 A gull flies by.

O constantly churning sea I love you so.
 Your waters in always changing patterns Draw me to your shores.
 The gull snags a fish from the water,
 Flies away, and I stand alone.

True worth is in being, not seeming;
 In doing, each day that goes by,
 Some little good — not in the dreaming

*There came a time
 When from the cauldron's depths
 A heat arose,
 That melted human hearts
 And eyes saw wounds, unseen before
 And ears heard sighs
 Beyond the ear-trump's bogus limit,
 And hands that sat akimbo on the hips
 Or interlocked in howl on the chest Felt such an increase in their length and strength That naught could keep them from their old resolve To touch antipodes

A Parable

A man approaches a palace. Its only entrance is guarded by some fierce Huns who will only let men named Julius enter. The man tries to bribe the guards by offering them a year's supply of choice chicken parts. They neither scorn his offer nor accept it, but merely take his nose and twist it till it looks like a molly screw. The man says it is imperative that he enter the palace because he is bringing the emperor a change of underwear. When the guards still refuse, the man begins to Charleston. They seem to enjoy his dancing but soon become morose over the treatment of the Navajos by the federal government. Out of breath, the man collapses. He dies, never having seen the emperor and owing the Steinway people sixty dollars on a piano he had rented from them in August.

Another Parable

I am given a message to deliver to a general. I ride and ride, but the general's headquarters seem to get farther and farther away. Finally, a giant black panther leaps upon me and devours my mind and heart. This puts a terrific crimp in my evening. No matter how hard I try, I cannot catch the general, whom I see running in the distance in his shorts and whispering the word "nutmeg" to his enemies.
